The New York Riots.

We publish a full account of the great riots which occurred in New York on the 4th of July and the Sunday following. In regard to the cause of the disturbance the Times says:

The cause of this disgraceful row must be laid directly at the door of the Mayor, whose disorganizing and reckless opposition to the laws of the State, cannot but have had its effect upon the minds of the baser part of our population; and the disbanding of the old police, on the eve of the Fourth, was, in itself, sufficient to incite a mob.

It was expecting too much to imagine that the prowling ruffians who infest this city should not avail themselves of the unemployed condition of our police force, to create a disturbance on the Fourth. It requires the utmost care and diligence, even at the best of times, to keep the rowdy part of our population in order; but they are as reckless as hungry wolves when they have any reason to believe that they will be permitted to indulge in their savage propensities; and, knowing that Mayor Wood had disbanded his illegal police, while the new force was not imperfectly organized, these ruffians emerged from their dens like a horde of wild beasts and disgraced our city and defiled our national holiday by their loathsome orgies. Two rival organizations of firemen, composed of the very lowest class of our inhabitants, and living in the vilest portions of the city, ranked from Under Bellevue and Hudson streets, and would be called Freight Agents, Detroit.

The Fourth in the Country.

We have received numerous communications, from correspondents in different parts of the country, in relation to the manner in which the Fourth of July proceedings in the respective localities from which they were written, are minutely transacted—all of which we must decline to publish. A friend of Springfield, more glorious than all the others, goes off in an ecstacy of patriotism and jubilation, over what he saw and a part of which he was. His letter does well others, though well worthy of a place.

A Trait of the Douglas Democracy.

Mr. Arnold's Fourth of July oration, at the laying of the corner-stone of the University of Chicago, in the presence of Senator Douglas, is severely criticised by a writer in the Democratic Press, under the head of "Douglas Democracy." We see no occasion for his wrath. Mr. Arnold was certainly more complimentary to Mr. Douglas than he ought to have been. There was no occasion for any fine phrases, or for any special commendation of Mr. Douglas' gift. The orator understood that perfectly, and we think it bad taste in him that he permitted a mere business transaction to take the shape of a charitable donation for religious or educational purposes. Mr. Douglas owned, three or four miles below the city, a large tract of unprofitable property, the value of which was uncertain. He gave a portion of it—a small portion—to the trustees of the University of Chicago, hoping, in this manner to obtain conditions, among which were the making of specified costly improvements, which cannot be made without enhancing his adjoining acres in a sum greatly exceeding the amount of the so-called donation. It was a fair bargain, displaying a good deal of commercial shrewdness on the part of the Senator—a bargain by which he will put $16,000 to $20,000 in his pocket. That's all there is of it. This being the case, how Mr. Arnold can escape the charge of making trash yield to his desire to be courteous, when he bestowed complimentary phrases to the speculator, we do not see.

But, he made a Republican harangue, says his assailant. So he did; he preached the doctrine laid down in the Declaration of Independence—that's Republicanism; and though he omitted to make any special application of the truths that he rehearsed from that grand old charter, it was easy to see that they grated and jarred upon ears that were open to receive only the new reading of that document upon which Mr. Douglas, keeping pace with the aspirations and disclosures of the South, construed it as signifying, That they could grant to whom the Declaration is read as it was written is one of the traits of the Douglas Democracy.

Chicago Reform School.

The question "what shall we do with vagrant boys?" Mr. Nichols, at the Chicago Reform School, is in a fair way to answer—answer so fully and satisfactorily that it will require a grumbler of no ordinary hardihood to challenge the correctness of the results at which he will arrive. Commencing with little encouragement from the public, and with small pecuniary assistance, he has persevered in his labor of love, until it is now manifest that the charity which he has been instrumental in founding, is the noblest, as it will be the most successful enterprise in which any citizen of Chicago has engaged.

As we understand it, the school has been but recently opened. But little more than one year has elapsed since it received its first pupil. It was organized under momentary pressure of opinion, gotten up by the representations of a few good men who could not see boys, whose only faults were lack of opportunity and education, thrust, by minor offenses, into the herd of hardened offenders, to be further corrupted and utterly ruined. The city came reluctantly to its aid; and the great public, as it always does when anything new is started, stood back to look at it. Viewing aside the motion of unworthy of himself and the faith that is professed, that the system of terrorism—the scourge or the shower-bath or solitary confinement—was the system to be applied to little human beings whose faults and crimes were those of ignorance, to set out in the endeavor to arouse, vivify, and bring into full play their hitherto neglected moral sense—to excite in them the feeling of self respect—in a word, to fight their vicious habits and turbulent propensities with the weapons of love and kindness. The end is such as will shame the advocates of the rod. Intelligence enlisted by creating and cherishing the brightening sense of self respect, that brings into play the virtuous habits, seemingly dead, have yielded to gentle persuasion; and turbulence and theft has never acknowledged the authority of a master, breaks down and becomes submissive under the caresses of the affectionate and parental government that is set up. Not a blow is struck—not a harsh word is used. What is done kindness alone accomplishes; and this is consistent.

It is estimated by other institutions reared upon similar principles that of the young of fourteen eighty per cent. are reclaimed. Under the system that the Reform School has adopted we are still in the early harvest. Two-thirds of all that is to be gathered is yet to be garnered in. We submit to our readers that this is something to work for—a something of which to be proud.

Location for Wagonmakers.

Those desirous of establishing factories during the Democracy of the South, the Fourth of July has been selected as the day on which to pour out their combustible sentiments. The officers of Railroads, and the consignees of Bing of the Union, will have remarks down. We trust sections for the boats delivered at Yellowstone, Two Rivers, Pine Barrens, and other possible localities, with which our Southern exchanges, side by side by, come heavily freighted. [Detroit Free Press.

Why, in the name of the world, those whose ears are used for, and sometimes to see the approaching election, the Democracy only need look their Southern brethren say.

Laying the Corner-Stone of the Clay Monument.

MUSIC, ELOQUENCE, CEREMONIES, &c.

[From the Cincinnati Commercial.]

THE MORNING OF THE DAY.

We morning of the Fourth, in Lexington, was exceedingly lovely. The sky was bright, the air was sweet, and the trees along the shady streets was redolent of the bloom of June. Nature was in her most pleasant mood, and the aroma of growing corn and ripening wheat. At an early hour, along all the roads leading to town, were strings of carriages long drawn out and coming at full speed, marking the landscape with streaks of dust. We thought the whole hill-side alight before.

Now, the monument stands overlooking fields of wheat, and the old hill, scattered from the town, was crowned by a battery, which saluted the rising sun of Independence Day, and during the day stirred up the echoes at intervals of an hour.

ASHLAND.

The especial points of visitation were those dedicated to the memory of HENRY CLAY. First in order was Ashland, the old family residence of Mr. Clay. This is situated on the south side of the main road eastward from the town, distant from the court house about a mile and a half; and from the road perhaps two hundred yards. The new house erected on the site of the old house of Clay, is a splendid building, in the style of the old one. It is, in fact, and exaggeration of the original. The grounds and shrubbery are nearly as when they were the favorite haunt of Harry of the West. The popular impression that the house is surrounded by ash trees is incorrect. The ash is also, forced free that predominates in the native woods around, but locust trees are the kings of the grounds at Ashland. The favorite ash of Mr. Clay is pointed out. It leads northward toward the turnpike. On one side is a row of gigantic locusts, and on the walk is bordered by all other kinds of trees. In a manner shocking the boldness of that nature. The principal places between Richmond and Ashland are Waterloo, a beautiful place, and Cheshire about 1,500 inhabitants. Hagerstown was formerly the residence of Gen. White, Judge Gaff, and Judge Watts have run no further than Cambridge, and Hagerstown is not increasing.

The road from Richmond to Lexington the road runs mostly through the Indian Reserve, from which the Indians have been removed only 12 or 15 years, consequently the improvements are all new. The country the whole distance is heavily timbered, the principal timber being white oak, poplar, red oak, sugar, and walnut. Sawmills are now erecting all along the road, and an immense amount of lumber will soon be shipped to market from that region. Much of it will find its way by this and the Wabash Valley road to the prairies of Illinois. It is the finest timber in the world for manufacturing purposes, and the time is not far distant when it will be worth its weight in gold.
